William E. Stone Laid to Rest-Suit for Salary - Hinman-Guthrie Nuptials-News in Brief.

Mrs. M. L. Stoddard, a waitress in "Grill" restaurant at 246 Twentyish street, was yesterday made happy drawing $10,000 from the San Fransee Examiner. The news of the lady's groon about 3 o'clock, when she reeired a letter from the San Francisco Examiner informing her that she was lucky winner of the capital anual prize offered with the Weekly Expiner amounting to $10,000. A short ume after receiving the glad tidings Mrs. Stoddard received a telegram from e paper confirming the good news entained in the letter. The letter informed Mrs. Stoddard of the lucky vinning and stated that the check for 19,000 would be sent the next day by Wells Fargo Express company; that the would be required to submit her Examiner receipt and the number to express company, and if they taily with the number on the express pack-ar the money will be paid over to her. The letter also contained some very red advice to Mrs. Stoddard, advis-ing her to be careful of the money, to bg her to be careful of the money, to most it in United States government tods or put the money in some good ribble savings tank, or else invest it carfally in some good city improved talestate that will bring her in some role. The letter was signed by J. Statt of the San Francisco Examiner. The tdegram read as follows:

SAD DEATH OF EFFICIENT OFFICER

Fourth District Court-June Weddings -Garden City News Notes.

Special Correspondence. Provo, Utah Co., June 17 .- Frank J. Tucker, former city marshal of Provo, and a man highly respected in the community, met death last evening from the accidental discharge of his pistol while seated in the sheriff's office in the court house. About 10:35, persons in the court house hall heard a pistol shot from the direction of the sheriff's office, and upon entering saw Mr. Tucker seated in a chair, his head thrown back, unconsclous and gasping for breath. George Ross was standing over him and calling Frank! Frank!

to shun evil and evil associates. They eulogized the many good qualities of the young man, who was of a kindly openhearted disposition, and offered words of comfort to the bereaved.

The attendance at the services was large and the floral tributes were numerous and among the most beautiful ever seen to Orden. A large funeral Mr. Ross explained that the two were sitting there talking and were about to go out, and had partially ever seen in Ogden. A large funeral cortege followed his remains to their arisen from their chairs to do so when the report of the pistol shot was heard, and Mr. Tucker sank back in the chair. Mr. Ross did not at first know whose pistol had exploded, but when he found The action brought by Edwin T. Woolley against the Ogden Woolen Mills company to recover $708.25, alleged to be due on contract was heard by his own weapon all right, concluded it was Mr. Tucker's. Mr. Ross supposed it was still on Mr. Tucker, but a few moments later it was noticed by Policeman Ferre, who had come in, on the floor some distance from Mr. Tucker's chair. A few people were attracted to the office by the explosion, and among 1903, and a contract was signed to that effect. In July, 1903, the woolen mills, while he was managing it, caught fire and burned to the ground, being a total loss to the company, and therefore the first to enter was Mrs. Joseph Kirkwood, who showed self-control and iterested helpfulness. She directed that the dying man, for such he proved to be, be placed on a bed, and rubbed Mr. Woolley's services were dispensed with, but he claims that the company is still liable for his salary. The court, after hearing the testimony and arguments, took the matter under advisehis wrists, and called others to rub him, with the idea of keeping alive the respiration till the doctor arrived, and endeavored to keep up the respiration by breathing into Mr. Tucker's mouth. How the pistol came to be discharged will always remain a mystery. It was at first thought it had fallen out of Mr. Tucker's pocket, and that the trigger had caught on the chain and exploded a cartridge as Mr. Tucker was in the act of rising from the chair. But this seems hardly possible. The gun is a Browning Brothers' Automatic, German patent, and an examination of its construction is not favorable to the above theory. A more reasonable theory is that Mr. Tucker had the pistol in his coat pocket and was fingering it absentmindedly, thinking probably that it was at safety or rather not thinking at all; that the muzzle was turned upward and toward his body, and that it was thus discharged, and that at the moment of the discharge Mr. Tucker pulled his hand out of his coat picket and involuntarily threw the gun on the floor where it was found. An examination of the course of the An examination of the consecutive bullet by Dr. Taylor showed that it entered the body immediately above the left hip and ranged upwards to-
